Main Marvel comic G1 cartoon IDW (2005) Toys Merchandise Gallery Sure, just one Bumblebee's pretty nonthreatening. But get a hive... Bumblebee gots lots of toys! Toys The Transformers The original sweet boy. Chinese-release Bumblebee. Note the unpainted rear bumpers. Bumblebee (Mini Vehicle, 1984-1986) Takara ID number: 11, C-56 Bumblebee's original toy, released in 1984 and in Japan in 1985, originally hails from the Micro Change series, transforming into a "penny-racer"-proportioned Volkswagen Beetle. He was available through the first three years of the Transformers series, the entire duration of the Mini Vehicle assortment, the only 1984 Mini Vehicle to do so. 'Bee has a lot of minor variations. Throughout 1984 and 1985, Bumblebee was produced in both yellow and red (as was Cliffjumper), a move meant to "make the line look bigger" according to former Hasbro R&D Vice President George Dunsay, [1] For his 1984 release, both color versions had an Autobot sigil on the roof/chest. In 1985, this was replaced by a rubsign. The rubsign remained on the 1986 release, though he was only released in yellow that year. The original version of Bumblebee also features the "Dunlop" brand name stamped on his tires. Packaging-wise, there are several more variations. In 1984, the Mini Vehicles were packaged in vehicle mode. Come 1985, a picture of the toy in vehicle mode was added to the front of the card, and later the toys proper were packaged in robot mode. From this point on, the Mini-spies and iron-on reflective patches. The Mini-spies and cliffjumper only came in white, one of the three possible colors for the add-ons. For his 1985 Japanese release, Bumblebee came in a small box rather than on a card. He was available in both red and yellow, both versions having the rubsign rather than the foil faction symbol. He was also released in the 1986 assortment, but only in yellow. This is why he has two ID numbers in Japan; in 1986, the line switched from a single-series number listing to splitting it up between "C" (Cybertron/Autobot) and "D" (Destron/Decepticon) groupings. Bumblebee was released in a wide variety of colors in markets south of the border, which will be covered in separate entries below (as to not make this entry unreadably long; there's a ton of variants and more keep popping up!). In the early 1990s, Bumblebee was one of many Transformers finally released in China. He comes on a card nigh-identical to the original Hasbro packaging, with a few Chinese-language stickers added. The toy itself has some notable differences from the original, however: aside from an unpainted rear bumper (the most obvious difference), this Bumblebee has a paler, less-saturated yellow plastic. He also only came in yellow, and only came with a rubsign. This toy, along with many other Chinese-market Transformers at the time, somehow made their way to UK stores, most notably Woolworths. This mold was later retooled into a keychain version of Bumblebee, as well as for a Transformers Collection multipack (see below). The original mold is also used by the Optimus-faction Volks. Later retoolings of this mold were used to make Glyph and Bug Bite. Bumblebee (Mini Vehicle, 1985) When he was released in Mexico by IGA, Bumblebee came in five decoes: both the original red and yellow, as well as blue, silver, and white. The silver and white versions are particularly notable (and significantly rarer), as they have red-painted faces (similar to that of probably-Hubcap). The sticker on the back of Mexican Bumblebee's head is also slightly different from the Hasbro/Takara release, being the same general design, but smaller and with thicker, simpler lines. Years later, large numbers of Mexican Transformers somehow made it to various European markets. "Eu vou a pé eu vou de fusca / Eu vou em busca de um amor..." Bumblebee was released in Brazil by Estrela in 1985 as the Robocar "Volks", initially available in two color schemes: his original yellow and black, and slick-looking silver and black with a gold face, both decorated with a new thin tech-detailing sticker on their chests based on the original Micro Change decals. The design of the sticker on the back of his head was also removed. Later, Estrela released red and orange versions of Volks sporting the new "Optimus" faction insignia; given this new factional alignment, for the purposes of this wiki, the Optimus-aligned Volks is considered a separate character from Bumblebee. More information on Silver Bumblebee. Antex in 1985, both sporting the Estrela stickers and "DUNLOP"-less tires. Later releases of the orange version have been found with different paper stickers: the one on his chest/roof being one that was originally applied to Salt-Man Z's groin. (The back-of-the-head decal was probably also changed, but right know we don't know for sure.) The card's toy photography depicts the Estrela yellow and silver versions, but it is believed this was merely a holdover from the Estrela-designed packaging, and that neither coloration was ever sold in Argentina. These toys are more readily available on the secondary market than their Estrela predecessors. They also have lower quality control. Bumblebee (Mini Vehicle, 1985) As far as foreign Mini Vehicle variants go, the Venezuelan release of Bumblebee by Rubiplas is pretty tame. He came in both the silver paint on his face, and the chrome silver on the "plate" part of the head, leaving it as black plastic Bumblebee (Mini Vehicle, 1986) Manufactured by Argentinean company Lynsa but sold in Peru, this version of Bumblebee is similar to the Rubiplas release, lacking any paint or chrome, but this version also has plastic tires instead of rubber. So far, three different colorations have been confirmed: the original yellow-and-black, red-and-black, and peachy-orange-and-black. It is claimed that there may be six different versions of Peruvian Bumblebee all told, with the three others so far. Peruvian company BASA (which eventually changed to HUDE) apparently also (briefly) sold Transformers in Peru, but these were straight imports of Hasbro Mini Vehicles with a company sticker applied to the packaging. Older, squatter, faster. Goldbug (Throttlebot, 1987) The Throttlebot Goldbug was released in 1987, and like the other Throttlebot, a penny racer, as the original toy was, so its variation on the Volkswagen Beetle was much more realistically-proportioned. Despite being made of gold plastic, he does not seem to suffer from Gold Plastic Syndrome. Though the other Throttlebots seem to have always been intended to be new characters, Goldbug's head was based directly on that of Bumblebee's original toy. Bumblebee was the second Transformer to be given a second toy (as both Hot Rod and Rodimus Prime had been released the previous year). The Throttlebots were the only team to come with either Autobot or Decepticon Decoys; the other toys in the promotion only came with Decoys of the same faction they belonged to. This toy also doubles as the Beast Wars: Uprising incarnation of Goldbug. Still not Herbie. Bumblebee (Pretender, 1989) Accessories: Pretender shell, helmet, large "sonic blaster" rifle, small "laser pistol" As part of the sixth year of Generation 1, Bumblebee was released as a "Classic Pretender", expanding the range of Pretenders toys. This version of Bumblebee is still a Volkswagen Beetle, but now has what look like off-road tires. His vehicle mode has a realistically-proportioned front end, but the cab area is more relatively compact than on the Goldbug toy (though not quite as deformed as the original Bumblebee). He came with a gun for his robot mode that could be mounted on his robot mode that could be mounted by the could be mounte figure, but with the inner-robot gun to his teammate Jazz, who had Bumblebee's small gun in exchange. Hero Set (Multi-pack, 1989) Accessories: "Laser pistol" In Japan, Legends Bumblebee was identical to the Hasbro release. In Italy, GiG released their own version of the Hero Set, named "Set Commandos", instead of the Classic Pretender versions of the toys. Bumblebee was given the name "Saetta", which was originally the Italian name of Wheeljack. The "Set Commandos" toys were identical to the Japanese "Hero Set" versions. need a sweet boy in your pocket! Bumblebee (Keychain, 2001/2003/2007) A keychain version of Bumblebee was released by Fun4All under license from Hasbro in the US in 2001. Though based on the original toy, this is an entirely new set of molds, with a number of small differences throughout (minor proportion differences and generally softer edges), but the most immediately obvious one is the small plastic ring added to the rear bumper to accommodate the chain. The toy also returned to its original sticker set-up, doing away with the rubsign and restoring the Autobot symbol on his chest. In 2003, Takara released all four of the keychain Minibots (Cliffjumper, Bumblebee, Windcharger and Brawn) as 7-Eleven exclusives. They came in blind-packed boxes so you don't know which one you got until you open 'er up, plus each one could also come in a "chase" all-black version exclusive to this release. The black deco was later repurposed as an evil clone of Bumblebee. All four keychains were re-released in 2007 under the Heroes of Cybertron banner by Basic Fun (Fun4All having gone bankrupt in 2004). Sold on new cardbacks with the Heroes look, these releases are functionally identical to the originals (just the company stamping has changed) except for the actual chain part, which is a different style with an additional black plastic tab attached. This mold was also used to make Glyph. More information on the black keychain Bumblebee at TFU.info So close. Also included is a pack-in mini comic, "Transformers × Bump of Chicken EX Episode", written by Chama himself and illustrated by Akira Amemiya. The figure was exclusively released as one of the band's online shop items, though customers had to register as an EMTG (Entertainment Music Ticket Guard) member to purchase it. Collectors first had an opportunity to purchase the figure in-person at an event at Tokyo Dome from November 3-4, 2019, starting at 8:30 AM JST. In-person purchasers needed to have a ticket to the band's concert in order to purchase the figure. Online orders were also available at noon on November 8, 2019, and quickly sold out. Due to demand, a second run of the toy was made available on November 11, 2019, with the second run shipping in March 2020. Generation 2 Agold bug, but not Goldbug. Bumblebee (Mini Vehicle, 1993) Bumblebee (Mini Vehicle, 1993) Bumblebee's first Generation 2 toy was a redeco of his original toy, transforming into a "Penny Racer"-proportioned Volkswagen Beetle. However, this version has yellow chrome on the previously matte-yellow plastics. Thankfully, there seem to be few to no reports of chrome flaking on any of the Generation 2 Mini Vehicles. The only symbol on the figure is the G2 Autobot Insignia stamped on the bottom of his foot, followed by the word Autobot. More information on Generation 2 Bumblebee at TFU.info Now he's just gold. Bumblebee (Go-Bot, 1995) Bumblebee's second release in the Generation 2 line was as a recolor of the Go-Bot High Beam, transforming into a concept race car with exposed rear engine that looks exactly like the Speed Blaster car from Mattel's Hot Wheels line that was first released in 1991 under the names "Back Burner" and "Sonic Special". He features through-axle

Upgraded! Minibot Team (6-pack, 2004) "Bumble" was again reissued in Japan as part of The Transformers Collection "bookbox" series in a six-toy multi-pack, with Drag, Adams, Gears, Powerglide, and Warpath. This time around, Bumblebee was retooled to have a new cartoon-accurate head. Additionally, this version of the figure gave Bumblebee both an Autobot symbol and a rubsign, keeping the former in its traditional placement on his chest, and relocating the rubsign to the back of his head, replacing the original tech-detailing sticker that had previously been there. The entire set was redecoed to make the "G1 GoBots" set; this version of Bumblebee became Bug Bite. More information on Transformers Collection Bumblebee at TFU.info Alternators/Binaltech One of the earliest proposals in the Alternators/Binaltech line was for Bumblebee as a Volkswagen New Beetle, with Cliffjumper as the redeco. Unfortunately, VW evidently did not want to be associated with "war toys" at that time, and therefore the design never made it past the control drawing stage. Control drawings for both Bumblebee and Cliffjumper have been published in the Japanese The Transformers: Binaltech & TF Collection Complete Guide book. The design did, however, end up appearing fictionally as Bumblebee's form in the "Descent into Evil" comic. Proceed on your way to oblivion. This item has been

Titanium Series War Within Bumblebee (Cybertron Hero, unreleased) Accessories: Unknown, likely display stand Prior to the line's cancellation, a 6-inch resin copy depicting a transformable Bumblebee was seen at BotCon 2006. His alternate mode was the saucer-like car seen the Dreamwave's The War Within (which was itself based on the first cartoon appearance of Bumblebee). An alternate head of Cliffjumper was seen as well, indicating a retool. Unfortunately these never made it into production. Proceed on your way to oblivion. This item has been canceled, with no current plans for release. Classics Flight-enhancement buddy #2 Bumblebee (Deluxe, 2006) Accessories: Wave Crusher trailer/backpack The Deluxe Classics Bumblebee transforms into a yellow hatchback sports car (labeled as a "cruiser" on the package) that's basically Hasbro's typical cross between several existing car models: The car closely resembles a Peugeot 206 WRC, however some people see strong cues from other vehicles, such as the general shape of the car being based on a heavily customized one-of-a-kind 1992-1995 fifth generation Honda Civic hatchback with lots of aftermarket add-ons (such as a large front bumper, large fenders and a large rear wing).[2] The front section takes some design cues from various models of the Subaru Impreza WRX, namely the hood vent present on all models, the front grille of the 2004-05 WRX and the headlights and the headlights and the headlights and the widsection of the front bumper from the 2006-07 WRX STi.[3] The shape of the rear fenders is also vaguely inspired by the Volkswagen New Beetle. Bumblebee comes with a single accessory, a jet ski called "Wave Crusher" on a trailer. This is a bit similar than his Action Master toy's transforming heli-pack. His robot mode is designed to look like a typical teenager, dressed in a hoodie with packets and wearing big chunky trainers. [4] He is articulated with ball joints at the head, shoulders, elbows, hips, and has hinge knees. Wave Crusher converts into a jet pack that mounts onto his back. Later Masterpiece cars), and can fit inside Prime's trailer in vehicle mode. In contrast to larger entries in this line, Bumblebee lacks die-cast parts, and his tires are cast in hard, non-rubberized plastic. Additionally, following the trend started with Wheeljack, his side mirrors come detached out of the box, and can be found separately packaged inside the instruction bag. Accurate to the real-life Type 1 Beetle, he only has one mirror, on the driver's side; an extra is included in case of loss or breakage. For accessories, he comes with his gun (called Lazer Gun [sic] in the instructions), a second interchangeable face with an open-mouth smile to replace his regular neutral face, and a spare tire cover that its non-essential vehicle mode role, it can also be stored out of view on the car's underside. To make up for the smaller size of Bumblebee when compared to other figure, which can transform into its vehicle mode as seen in The Movie. The figure itself is referred to only as "Excelsuit" (the Japanese G1 dub name) on the instruction book, but according to the line-art included in The Transformers Masterpiece Official Guide, it's supposed to be Daniel Witwicky, though the back of the box refers to it as Spike. If purchased in Japan through Amazon.co.jp, one additionally gets an interchangeable "Battle Face" based on the original G1 toy's one. If purchased in other Asian markets outside of Japan, a collector coin is included instead of or in addition to the face. The coin package is shaped like his head, and identifies him as "Bumblebee Autobot". More information on Masterpiece Bumble/Bumblebee at TFU.info With all the cash from my multi-million

Instead, he comes with a three-piece jetpack, as worn by Bumblebee in the cartoon episode "Dinobot Island, Part 1". The toy-inspired "battle face, along with the two cartoon-based faces from the original release. He also comes with an extra sticker sheet for decal as seen in the episode "City of Steel". The non-Japanese Asian market version came with a special collector's coin. The coin package is once again shaped like Bumblebee's head (with the "battle face" faceplate on the front), but actually identifies him as Goldbug. Go figure. And Takara will forever use this as an excuse not to make a Masterpiece

Witwicky (Exosuit), spare tire cover, license plate, neutral face, smiling face This Hasbro version of Masterpiece MP-21 Bumblebee is virtually unchanged from its Takara counterpart. All accessories included with the MP-21 version (minus the retailer-exclusive battle mask) are present in this release. Unlike the Takara version which (confusingly) identifies the Exosuit figure as Spike or Daniel, this version identifies him as just Spike. Oddly, the instruction manual and package have a couple of quirks—first, stock photos of Bumblebee's robot mode show his hood vent flap exposed and his backpack untransformed, where the flap should be tucked into its compartment in his pelvis and the backpack rotated, then the bumper folded in. The instructions also show this, but they show the steps for tucking in the flap and transforming the backpack. Second, the instructions for the swappable face gimmick have two errors: The regular face is shown twice instead of the smiling face being swapped, and the battle mask is shown in the instructions, despite not being included with the actual toy. More information on Masterpiece Bumble/Bumblebee at TFU.info Now with far less cool and far more gremlin face. Bumblebee (Cyber Commander, 2015) Released in the first wave of Cyber Commander figures, Bumblebee changes from muscle car to robot in a few easy steps. His transformation scheme is largely based on that of Robots in Disguise Legion Bumblebee. His arms feature a decent range of articulation as well as 5mm-compatible hands. His robot mode stands taller than most modern Leader class figures.

the Autobot faction symbol on his head is flipped. He was blind-boxed and available in two cases of the first series and the only case of the second series. This mold was redecoed into Alt-Modes Class mold who transforms from a robot to car, with a vehicle mode based on his alt mode in Transformers: Earth Wars. As with some of the Titans Return Legends Class figures to ride inside him. He also features 5mm-compatible hands, although the yellow piece can prevent any weapon's slightly longer posts to peg down through his hands. Also, take note that the vehicle back wings/shoulder kibble can sometimes block the way for wielding weapons; however the shoulder parts can be swapped for better tolerance, but prevents him from fully transforming into vehicle mode. Oddly, his molded license plate reads "100 STRA" which is a variation of his movie counterpart's "900 STRA" plate. Although the instructions tell you to immediately swing down the chest/vehicle roof to his shoulders against the piece until it clicks properly (make sure the rear vehicle's pegs and the shoulder's rectangle holes are in place first). Take note that the tail-end of the chest/roof hinge piece is prone to paint chipping due to the friction between both hinged vehicle rear pieces. This mold was also used to make Roadburn. He transforms into a (non-functional) scaled-down replica of the 2002 au INFOBAR, and in lieu of cellphone functions, the figure can be paired via Bluetooth with a smartphone, such as an iPhone, to act as a notification alarm in either robot or INFOBAR mode. The screen is also non-functional, but pre-printed cards are included which can be slid into the screen to show an Autobot logo, Decepticon logo, a mockup of a cellphone home screen, or a technical "Transformers INFOBAR" design. He features articulated hands for grasping the included tiny flip-phone accessory (which can flip open) that is stored in the bottom of the cell phone mode. The figure also includes a display stand. The project was crowdfunded through Japanese crowdfunding site Makuake. [15] Both Bumblebee and Megatron could only be obtained by contributing 16,200 yen to the project to receive a package of all three INFOBAR figures; at the 5,400 yen level, contributors received only INFOBAR Optimus Prime. The project received one million yen in the first 24 hours, ultimately topping out at over 32 million yen. This figure was differently retooled, with another head, and redecoed into INFOBAR Megatron. Authentics Somebody give him a walking stick. Autobot Bumblebee (Bravo, 2017)
Released in the first wave of the Authentics toyline, "Autobot Bumblebee" is the size of a 2015 Robots in Disguise Battle Pack toy. In just four steps, he changes from an evergreen-inspired robot into a car reminiscent of his Classics iteration, and he features very limited articulation consisting of his head and his shoulders. Who asked for this? Autobot Bumblebee (Alpha, 2017) Around the height of the average Voyager figure. "Autobot Bumblebee" is nigh-identical to his smaller equivalent. Class figure, "Super Bumblebee" is a retool of the Super Bumblebee toy from the Robots in Disguise (2015) line, with a new upper body and head with 15 sounds and phrases that activate when his Autobot symbol is pushed on his chest. He transforms in 3...no, just a single step by pulling his arms. Bumblebee (Titan Changer, 2019) This Bumblebee is a Titan Hero-sized mold, utilizing a different transformation scheme compared to his previous Authentics figures. Vintage G1 Sweet boy will outlive us, mere mortals, with periodical re-releases on a per decade basis. As it should be. Bumblebee ("Legion Class" reissue, 2018) Part of the first wave of the Vintage G1 line, Bumblebee is a largely-identical reissue of Encore Bumble, using the "newly"-tooled head introduced in The Transformers Collection and also sharing many of the deco alterations. There are a number of small differences between the Encore and Vintage G1 versions, though: The screw in the center of Bumblebee's back; now replaced with a pin, much like the original toy. This is also likely down to Hasbro's current stance on using pins in place of screws as much as possible. He has extra products that wasn't around during his last reissue. The original sticker detail on the back of his head has also returned, whereas the Encore version had a rubsign placed there instead. This also happens to be the only Vintage G1 Minibot to not have a rubsign. Despite these differences from the original, card still displays the original toy-based package art. Of particular note is that this is the first ever release of this figure that's identified on its packaging as being an "official licensed product" approved by Volkswagen. Like all Vintage G1 figures, Bumblebee was exclusive to the website of Australian fashion chain Cotton On.
Oddly, the Australian release came in multilingual packaging intended for the European market, a rare but not entirely unheard of occurrence. Due to the limited space on the back, this, unfortunately, means the iconic Tech Spec card is omitted, replaced by parental warnings in 24 languages about the possibility of breakage due to excessive force, and that parts are not designed to reattach. In Singapore, Bumblebee was released as a giveaway for their screenings of the Bumblebee live-action movie. War for Cybertron Trilogy Wait I'm a retool of Cliffjumper now? This must be Shattered Glass or something... Bumblebee (Deluxe Class, 2020) TakaraTomy ID number: WFC-09 TakaraTomy release date: January 20, 2021 Accessories: Three-piece blaster, 2 skis, car trunk/shield Part of the Second wave of War for Cybertron Trilogy Deluxe Class toys, concurrent with the Earthrise toyline and season of the Netflix cartoon, Bumblebee is a retool of Earthrise Cliffjumper, having all of the original figure's vehicle mode parts replaced with those of a licensed Volkswagen Beetle without the "penny racer" proportions, along with a new head sculpt. Almost all of Bumblebee's yellow coloring is painted, which avoids color disparity, particularly in vehicle mode. On both of his ends, the bumpers/fenders are made of soft rubbery plastic.
Bumblebee also has molded high-performance brake discs. Much like Cliffjumper's other mold-mates, Bumblebee's depiction as being rather small in most Transformers media means this figure is much shorter than a typical Deluxe-priced figure and is closer to being a particularly large Legends-priced figure. Like all Deluxe Class figures of the War for Cybertron subline, Bumblebee includes numerous 3 mm posts and 5 mm ports for attaching other accessories as part of the C.O.M.B.A.T. System, but due to his small size he cannot easily accommodate an entire Weaponizer or Modulator figure. Additionally, he is highly articulated for a mainline Legends-sized Transformer, with over 90-degree ankles and two-way elbows, and a complex transformation scheme. Undocumented in the instructions, Bumblebee's neck is actually mounted on a ball-joint, and when popped out of its housing offers a larger range of articulation. The housing has also been updated for seemingly no reason, with a taller "collar" section compared to Cliffjumper and Hubcap. The rest of his price-point is made up for with Cliffjumper's bazooka, now painted in slightly darker gunmetal color and lacking the paint on the rear piece. The entire cannon folds out to fit in his car mode's underside to help balance when skis are deployed. It can also mount on either his thigh or on the side or top of his shoulder meaning you can put the entire cannon in these spots. Unlike his mold-mates, 5 mm port holes are absent in Bumblebee's vehicle parts, meaning displaying the bazooka in vehicle mode requires the rear of the car mode to be transformed differently so the car trunk post has space to flip out and connect to the back-end of the cannon. Similarly, his detaching car back-end of the cannon use a unique post and port to connect to each other. Also unlike his mold-mates, the pegs that connect the car trunk with the robot fists in vehicle mode are now complete circles instead of half circles. These larger pegs are a very tight fit in the fists; detaching the pegs down can make transformation more feasible. As per the norm, the stock renders depict him with sharp head-horns, but the final product has them rounded off. Like the rest of the War for Cybertron Trilogy toyline, Bumblebee is exclusive to Walmart in Canada and the US but was released at standard retail in Asia. His G1 cartoon-accurate blaster is sold separately as part of the War for Cybertron Trilogy Deluxe Centurion Drone Weaponizer Pack. However, there is no way to store this blaster while Bumblebee is in vehicle mode. Bumblebee is one of two puzzling Netflix-branded figures try to depict characters as they appeared on the War for Cybertron Trilogy cartoon, favoring Cybertronian alt modes and extra battle damage, but that was not the goal for Bumblebee and Soundwave. Instead, with clean paint jobs and never-seen-on-Netflix Earth alt modes, they might be the most G1-faithful available versions of their characters in the Generations toyline era. If you actually want a toy that resembles Bumblebee from Netflix TV, then you might be looking for one of the Buzzworthy Bumblebees. The original Cliffjumper version of the mold was given two new head toolings to make Generations Selects Hubcap and Shattered Glass Collection Goldbug respectively, and was also given Bumblebee's head to make Selects Bug Bite. Buzzworthy Bumblebee We all made that face trying to decipher that packaging. Bumblebee is a Core Class mold that converts from a robot into a car based upon Bumper's Choro-Q Mazda Familia alt-mode (complete with rear plate detailing!). He comes with a cartoon-inspired blaster that he holds via a 3 mm post which stores in his vehicle mode's rear underside, doubling as an exhaust pipe of sorts. Unlike most of the figures on this page, this Bumblebee features a matte finish on his vehicle tires and his gun. As seen in the rear packaging's stock render, Bumblebee's "wing" kibble/back fenders can be folded back for a cleaner robot appearance. As a result of sharing similarities to the original toy's transformation scheme, Bumblebee's arms sit slightly lower in robot mode. Bumblebee also comes with a (minimally-)transforming exosuit Spike Witwicky figure, although the exosuit features a silver-painted head dome with no indications of whoever may be inside, making it more a generic exosuit figure than any specific human character. This raised the MSRP from Core Class's normal ten to fifteen US dollars, though some Target stores seemingly at random charged seventeen for the set. Despite the store exclusivity, the set became a pegwarmer, often leaving entire pegs full of unsold stock. If one is crazy for show-accuracy, one of the blasters from Studio Series Core Class Ratchet can be used on this figure. Much like the rest of the Buzzworthy Bumblebee toys, the box is in the style of the 2018 Bumblebee toyline, with additional renders of the evergreen Bumblebee design. Additionally, the toy features Kingdom-style package art with the War for Cybertron logo present. We simply could not function without his tireless efforts. So, a round of appliance for this inanimate carbon rod! Origin Bumblebee (Deluxe Class, 2021) Buzzworthy Bumblebee's second all-new mold, "Origin Bumblebee" is a diminutive Deluxe Class figure, once again branded as part of the War for Cybertron Trilogy. For the first time in toy form, Bumblebee transforms into the "flying saucer" vehicle seen in "More than Meets the Eye, Part 1" in 23 steps. His robot mode is based on concept art by Ken Christiansen, which had earlier influenced Bumblebee's look in the 2019 IDW comic series and the War for Cybertron Trilogy animated series. As part of the War for Cybertron play pattern, Bumblebee features multiple 5 mm ports and 3 mm posts compatible with the C.O.M.B.A.T. System/F.O.S.S.I.L. Technology and "fire blast" effects. Being a modern, smaller-scale Deluxe Class figure, Bumblebee includes multiple accessories to fill out the price point, consisting of a 5 mm handheld blaster, five conductor rods as seen in "More than Meets the Eye, Part 1" that Bumblebee cannot actually hold, and a jet pack as seen in "Dinobot Island, Part 1". The jet pack is 5 mm compatible, but is also specifically shaped to fit the back kibble of the Earthrise Cliffjumper mold. Bumblebee was revealed by In Demand Toys on Facebook in advance of any announcement by Hasbro or Target. He both is and is not Bumblejumper. Worlds Collide (4-pack, 2021) Series: War for Cybertron Trilogy Accessories: Three-piece blaster, 2 skis, car trunk, Allspark Released as part of the Buzzworthy Bumblebee "Worlds Collide" 4-pack, this Bumblebee features the body of Earthrise Cliffjumper, while retaining the Buzzworthy Bumblebee transforms into a custom 1980s sports coupe; hybridizing the Porsche 924 Turbo and Mitsubishi Starion models. He retains the bazooka included with all versions of the mold, this time painted green to resemble the bazooka Ironhide used in "Transport to Oblivion." He also comes with the Allspark, redecoed from the War for Cybertron Trilogy Megatron/Fossilizer Skelivore Spoiler Pack. Included in the set alongside Bumblebee is Nemesis Primal, Blackarachnia, and Fangry with Brisko. While outwardly branded as part of the War for Cybertron Trilogy on the packaging, the instructions also show the Cliffjumper head instead of the Bumblebee version. The set was found in a Walmart in the U.S.[16] prior to an official reveal from Hasbro, possibly due to a shipment error. As with other Buzzworthy Bumblebee toys, it is exclusive to Target in the U.S. SLUGBUG! Creatures Collide (4-pack, 2022) Series: Legacy Accessories: Three-piece blaster, 2 skis, car trunk/shield Part of the Buzzworthy Bumblebee "Creatures Collide" 4-pack, "Autobot Goldbug" is a chimera of molds, matching the vehicle mode parts from War for Cybertron Trilogy Bumblebee with the headsculpt from Shattered Glass Collection Goldbug; it also makes use of the interior chest parts from the original Earthrise Cliffjumper, as the "popped collar" of the Bumblebee version of the toy would cause clearance issues with the shape of the Goldbug head. All this results in a robot loosely accurate to Goldbug's original character model that transforms into a licensed, goldy-caramel-coloured Volkswagen Beetle. He retains the same accessories and functionality as his prior War for Cybertron Trilogy release. Alongside Goldbug, the set also includes Predacon Scorponok, Ransack, and Skywasp. The Buzzworthy Bumblebee line was exclusive to Target in the U.S., though this set was stocked by In Demand Toys in the UK before any official announcement by Hasbro. Classic Heroes Team Back to square one. Bumblebee (All Star Rescan, 2022) A redeco of the Rescue Bots Rescan Series carmode Bumblebee figure, Classic Heroes Team Bumblebee features a slightly different deco from the original release, including new black paint on the hands. The vehicle mode resembles the 2018 redeco of the same figure, with two stripes on the hood instead of just one, but also features a new Autobot insignia at the center of the hood. This toy was also released in a Rescue Bots Academy packaging with the Classic Heroes Team branding as a subline, arguably making it into another incarnation of the character.
